Schedule.pdf (Sprint 4)

The Critical Path Is Identified By The Red And Bold Line.

This sprint, we focused on independent tasks. Each member worked on a specific task, feature, or bug with no dependencies, which allowed for a smooth, streamlined sprint without bottlenecks. Each task or feature was discussed by the team to assess its difficulty and the effort required to complete it, followed by an appropriate story estimate. Difficult tasks, or those with a large workload, were split into separate subtasks so team members could track linear and consistent progress toward sprint completion. This also gave the team member working on the ticket a clear overview of what was required, enabling them to ask clarification questions and eliminate assumptions. Furthermore, the team maintained constant communication via Slack, Discord, and Zoom for asynchronous communication and stand-ups, to identify and remove blockers and to ask further clarification questions.
